The knowledge base in children's and adults traumatic experiences and the impact this has on attachment is rapidly growing. There have been substantial and hopeful developments in our understanding of the neurobiology of trauma, assessment and investigation, methods of prevention and effective interventions.

The seminar series brings this knowledge base in accessible and practical ways from leaders in the field to practitioners on the ground. Social workers, police, educationalists, health workers and voluntary agencies will all find the series enlightening in developing their day to day practice.
